mothers2mothers (m2m) is an African not-for-profit that trains and employs women living with HIV as frontline health workers. These “Mentor Mothers” deliver health services and education in health facilities and in communities to ensure women and families access essential services and medical care, start any required treatment, and stay in care. From an initial focus on preventing mother-to-child transmission of HIV, m2m now delivers integrated services to ensure communities can thrive. Since 2001, m2m has reached almost 15M people and today operates across 10 African nations.
